Keeping Sweet Potatoes the Whole Year Round. METHOD OF PACKING, TREATING, ETC.

In the early part of summer, gather leaves from the woods, old leaves that have laid upon the ground during the winter, and spread them in the sun to dry. After they are dried, place them in a dry room for keeping until the time arrives for packing the progress. Alpacas, Black and Colored Delaines, Prints, Tickings, Sheetings, Table Diaper, Muslins, Brown and Bleached Crash. for keeping until the time arrives for packing the potatoes.

Have barrels ready to pack them into, cover the bottom of barrel inside with leaves, one inch deep, then lay in the pota toes carefully on top of the leaves, packing them closely together, then put a layer of leaves, enough to cover them, and then a layer of potatoes—and so continue with alternate layers until the barrel is filled.

After they are packed, barrels may be placed in rotation of tiers about the room in which they are to be kept. The barrels may be set on top of each other, (or over each other,) by laying pieces across the top of the barrels, six inches high, and laying boards on top of pieces, to set the barrels. Cloths and Cassimeres, BOOTS AND SHOES HATS OF THE LATEST STYLES; toes as needed, and will give rentilation to each barrel, as the potatoes must be uncovered at the top of the barrel, for the heated air to escape.

They must not be closed at the top, or they will rot. Immediately have a fire made in the room where the potatoes are to be kept, and the stove should set in the middle of the floor of the room, or near it as possible. I know of many sweet potato growers who keep them from October, up to the middle of April, in a chamber over the kitchen, by heating the room with a connecting pipe from the stove into a drum in the chamber, which is a good way, when a room can be had for the purpose, and can be made sufficiently warm thereby.

The room should not be exposed to too much light; have it darkened with curtains at the windows, and it would be preferable Bargains in Floor Oil Cloths!

at the windows, and it would be preferable not to keep them in a room that has win-dows on the north and ucst sides of the BARGAINS IN TRUNKS AND WILLOWARE: room.

The temperature of the room should be from seventy-five to eighty degrees, for at least ten days after being packed, so as to keep them warm, to dry in the usual sweating process, for should the room be cool (though not feel chilly) they will become damp and uct, and being kept in this chilled, cold, wet state, they will not keep.

During the time of sweating, the room must have air, have a window raised in the day time, the curtain at the window should. BARGAINS CAN BE HAD FOR ALL I As I am determined to well off my Stock at cost, as rap filly as possible, in order to close out. Now is you chance to get goods theep.

must have air, have a window assed in the day time, the curtain at the window should be rolled up, as it is not so important to keep the room darkened during the time of the usual sweating process, but after the time of sweating expires, then it is best to keep the room dark, or with not too much light. After ten days expire, the time allight. After ten days expire, (the time allowed for sweating, and at the temperature mentioned,) then it becomes important to keep them at uniform temperature, as they are very sensitive to frost. From iffty-five to sixty degrees is about the proper tem-perature; lower than forty degrees they will not bear without injury.

The time for keeping sweet potatoes in a warm room generally expires about the middle of April, but they can be kept and be good up to the first of October, when the new crop takes the place of the old, by a proper treatment, viz.: About the third week of April remove

About the third week of April remove the barrels of potatoes from the warm room to a cool dry room, on the north side of the house, and place the barrels in the north side of the room. The room must be cool in which they are kept, for if kept in a warm room during the warm months, the potatoes will sprout and eventually have dry white streads through them, and in consequence are not good. But when kept in a cool dry room, as I have stated, I have had them to keep good up to the first of October, which is the whole year round.

Note.—The leaves keep the potatoes warm and dry, and from shrinking, and with a bright color. With my experience of keeping sweet potatoes, I know of nothing to preserve them in such good condition as old leaves thoroughly dry. It is natural with potatoes to be in the dark, for the reason they are grown so in the ground. A few barrels of sweet potatoes packed in leaves may be kept in a good warm kitchen for family use, until the middle of April.

Maryland Farmer. Essex Pigs.

The Essex is the largest of the small breed of pigs—larger than the small Yorkshire, or Suffolk, or small Berkshire. It is in fact, what is known in England as a medium or middle breed. At twelve or medium or middle breed. At twelve or fourteen months old, we have had them dress over 400 lbs. They are entirely black, but when dressed are as white as the whitest. Their flesh is remarkably firm, and the lard of the best quality. They have small bones, small upright cars, short smout, good cheek and shoulders, square bodies, short legs, and capital hams. They are remarkably compact, and appear much smaller than they really are. They are the quietest and most gentle of all pigs; are good breeders and mothers. But their crowning excellence is their purity of breed—and, as a consequence, they impress their —and, as a consequence, they impress their good qualities with great force on any com-mon sows with which they may be crossed.

mon sows with which they may be crossed.

They will improve any breed with which they are crossed. We have crossed them with the large Berkshires, with perhaps a slight reduction in size, but with a marked improvement in form, fattening qualities and early maturity. Crossed with a large, coarse, Chester White sow, we get pigs either all black or black-and-white. For large, common pigs to be kept until they are a year or eighteen months old, this cross is admirable. For smaller pigs, with less bone and offal, and that will fat at nine months or a year old, another cross with the Essex is desirable. A third cross would give pigs almost as fine-boned as the pure Essex. Such pigs can be fattened at four or five months, old, and afford the choicest and most delicate of fresh pork—an article as yet almost unknown in our an article as yet almost unknown in our general markets, but which, when once known, is sure to command good prices. From the smallness of offal and exceed ingly quiet disposition, the Essex are east keepers. They are good graziers. We know of no breed superior to them in this respect. With the run of a good clover respect. With the run of a good clover pasture, well-wintered grade or thoroughbred Essex pigs will keep in fine growing condition all summer, and if allowed in such a pasture, two or three ears of corn each per day, with access to fresh water, will grow very rapidly, and be at all times ready for the butcher. This is the cheapest way of making pork. For the mere purpose of making pork we would not recommend the thorough-bred Essex.—

They are too fine and delicate. Their great value consists in their capacity of improv-They are too fine and defleate. Their great value consists in their capacity of improving any of the large, coarse breeds, or in fact, any kind of common pigs. For this purpose they must be bred pure. What a farmer needs to improve his stock is thorough-bred males. And in pigs there is no breed more thouroughly established than the Essex.—American Agriculturist.

Cooking Food for Stock. The Massachussetts State Board of Agriculture discussed this subject at their meeting in December, 1867, as we find in the report of that body for 1867-8. The speakers were all men of high character, mature years, experienced in breeding. speakers were all men of light character, mature years, experienced in breeding, keeping and fattening cattle, most of them engaged in the dairy business—and there was but little difference of opinion as to the use and value of food cooked in some way. Professor Agassiz, the illustrious naturalist, shows in the following clear, their and completely because the reason of the contraction of t Successor to John M. Ireland) desires to rall, the attention of the citizens of the BRICK MEETING HOUSE and vicinity to the fact that he has purchased the stock of John M. Ireland, Eq., and having added largely thereto, is now offering a very complete assortment of naturalist, shows in the following clear, plain, and unmistakable language, the reasons why food for domestic animals should be prepared, it being premised that the food we give our stock is not that which nature provides at first hands, but is dried and mechanically altered in many ways.—Soaking or steaming restores to its wonted bulk and suggestered and as Professor Soaking of steaming restores to its wontent bulk and succulence; and as Professor Agassiz said of this mode of preparing food in general; "It must save the secre-tion of saliva to an enormous extent, and therefore relieve the animal from a physi-ological labor which is very manifest. I have no doubt that must be the chief course of relief to the cattle, because day have no doubt that must be the chief source of relief to the eattle, because dry food must be softened in order to be digested; and it must be done by the secretory surfaces of the alimentary canal—and, in fact, by all the secretory surface of the digestive apparatus. Now, where does that come from? From the blood; and if you supply the food so far softened that the animal is relieved from that physiological labor, you place your animal in a much better condition for its work. I have no doubt that there is the explanation of your results—that your steam performs a part of the operation which your animal has te do itself by its secretion."
